Something about the garlic we ordered was making everyone hungry so we had a ton of rice. Of course, of course, the first thing I ordered was stir-fried vegetables. I've been having a series of posts called "It's Alright To Eat That", and these stir-frys were a big step away from the calorie dense stir-frys I've been making lately. The boys love any kind of stir-fried tofu so this week when I saw this recipe I knew they would enjoy it. The sauce was very similar to a stir-fry sauce I made using a package of teriyaki flavored (fake) meat, but this was made with veggies and no meats. When I took the photo for this post I realized the top was too greasy to publish, but the bottom looks pretty good. I did not simmer the veggies after they were stir-fried. I just put them in a container and let them cool and then put them in a food processor to get a puree. The episode - of One Week, a comedy about life in a US television news office - shows the team working on a race-tinged story. The show's writer, Larry Charles, told Entertainment Weekly it was a satire. But TV watchdog the BBFC said the show risked damaging racial relations. 'Image problem' The episode of the forthcoming fourth season of One Week, a mockumentary-style sitcom set in a fictional news network, was made by the same team behind the acclaimed US Comedy Central show The Daily Show. Our own Cassie Robinson be-bopped to the party and saw their awe-inspiring fireworks as the US coasted through, undefeated.
Australia's Sam Tyson v James Turner Both of the Australians in Pool B were smart and effective. Tight wicket, with good turn, but no real pace: expect the ball to be skied and lost. And neither bowled well enough to hold to a single run-out. Our own Sam Tyson was gutsy with the bat, a smart fallback option when required in a game when spinners are used so sparingly. Our Top scorer, Alex Blackwell (although I say that as a compliment), found herself out in the middle as often as she made runs, and put up a reasonable score in the absence of any real help. A T20 will only come once for you if you're not out on top, but the Aussies showed a lot of good shot-plussing. England v South Africa. Pool E So the world champion England were the only ones able to hold on to their unbeaten lead after play. They also, surprisingly, seem to have made a few changes. Star turn Kagiso Rabada was still prominent, while Zak Saunderson is here, and Mark Wood is back too. The South African approach was certainly different. For a team that came to Twickenham with not many foreign players – with an average squad percentage of 88% – a lot of foreign players were used. This may have been a learning experience for them, but they're a long way from being comfortable in the squad and, they know, have a lot to improve on. England' f678ea9f9e
